MANY BLOCKS OF STREETS GRADED WITH MACHINES

Alderman Clyde Tingley and Assistant Engineer Hutchinson Accomplish Great Improvement.

With two big grading machines, carrying crews of workmen, Alderman Clyde Tingley, member of the street committee, and Assistant City Engineer A. E. Hutchinson graded many blocks of street yesterday. The rain Wednesday night put the streets in condition for the work. Although the streets dried rapidly the aldermen from the Second ward and assistant engineer were able to improve greatly several of the main up-and-down streets.

The surface of North Second street was smoothed from Tijeras avenue, where the pavement ends, to the city limits. The work was done in forty-five minutes with the two machines, according to Alderman Tingley. North of New York avenue, where the dirt surface is hard, riding is almost as easy as it would be over a boulevard. This condition will last three months if it does not rain in the meantime, it was said.

Other Streets Improved.

North Fourth street was graded from the city limits to Copper avenue and Central avenue. This street was rough before the machine was dragged over it. West Central avenue was worked from Seventh street to Fourteenth street and East Central avenue also was graded. Prisoners from the city jail were at work on West Tijeras avenue yesterday afternoon.

Alderman Tingley and Mr. Hutchinson did not confine themselves to "grading" the work. They climbed aboard one of the machines on East Central and operated the wheels, raising and lowering the big grading blade. The alderman drove one of the four-horse teams, drawing a grader on one of the other streets.

RARE TREAT FOR ART LOVERS AT COUNTRY CLUB

Bert Phillips Exhibit This Week One of the Best Collections of Paintings Ever Seen in Albuquerque.

The exhibit of paintings by Bert G. Phillips, which is being shown this week at the Country club is one of the rarest treats that art lovers of Albuquerque have ever had offered to them. The exhibit is open to the public regardless of membership in the club, and all are invited to make the trip out on the mesa and see a collection of paintings the equal of which cannot be found outside the large centers of population.

Mr. Phillips is a member of the famous Taos colony of artists who have made New Mexico scenes famous all over the country and have perpetuated on canvas the picturesque Indian types of northern New Mexico which are rapidly fading away and which are to be found nowhere else in the world. His paintings have won distinguished mention in the leading art galleries of this country and Europe, and the privilege of viewing the collection which he has brought to Albuquerque is one which no one interested in art can afford to miss.

Variety of Themes.

There are more than thirty canvases in the collection now being exhibited at the Country club, and the first impression that one receives upon a superficial inspection of them is of the wide variety of themes which the pictures embrace. Mr. Phillips has confined himself to no narrow limits in the work that he has done, but has ranged abroad in the full field afforded by the wonderful Taos country—a country which in the words of the artist himself, contains enough variety to keep twenty men busy all their lives on original work.

Two classes of paintings predominate in the collection that is being shown here, snowscapes and Indian studies. In both of them Mr. Phillips has shown that his brush is that of a master. He has succeeded in making winter beautiful as few artists have been able to do. "The Valley in Winter," one of the most pretentious of the canvases in the collection, has a charm that is irresistible. It is a February scene near Taos showing a blue mountain stream threading through fields of melting snow, with a most impressive background of majestic, snow-covered mountains. A glance at the picture gives the observer what can best be described in very unartistic language as an all-outdoors feeling—a sensation of vastness and openness and of chill, crisp air.

"Relics of His Ancestors."

In striking contrast, but in the opinion of many the finest picture of the collection, is the canvas hung immediately over the fireplace. "Relics of His Ancestors." The colors are subdued and the theme somewhat somber, but both are handled with such consummate skill that it is hard to get away from its fascination and harder still to obliterate it from memory.

A youthful, clean-lined, dark-skinned Titan of an Indian is represented as half-sitting, half-crouching on the ground before several pieces of ancient Indian pottery, the relics of his ancestors—pottery made a thousand years ago and but recently excavated from the ruins of some forgotten pueblo. In the background is the dark entrance of a cave and the darker field of lava into which the cave extends and from which the excavations were made. The look of primitive sadness on the otherwise stolid features of the half-naked savage—the glimpse of an evanescent spirituality that is sensed rather than seen—constitutes the chief charm of the picture. Across the knees of the stalwart figure is a matted, sole sign that the Indian is of today and not of the dim age which gave birth to the relics upon which his gaze is fixed.

Feminine Types.

A number of feminine Indian types are shown, all of them excellent, but the most ambitious and perhaps the most charming is "Her Blanket," representing a beautiful Indian maiden in the fairer type common in the Taos country, in a sitting posture sewing beads on her wedding blanket. The purple tints used in this canvas are handled with exquisite harmony, and the ensemble is one of the most pleasing in the entire collection.

To attempt a description of all the excellent paintings in the collection or even of any considerable number of them, is manifestly impossible in a newspaper story. It is sufficient to say that every canvas holds a charm that can only be produced by a master's brush.

The exhibit will continue for the remainder of the week and next Sunday. The management of the Country club has turned the building over to Mr. Phillips for that time, and the artist has extended an invitation to the public to visit the clubhouse and inspect the paintings.

The body was taken to Strong & Brothers undertaking rooms.

OIL PROSPECTS NEAR CUBA ARE EXCELLENT

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE TO MORNING JOURNAL.)

Cuba, N. M., April 26.—Recent developments show that the question of the existence of oil in the Rio Puerro valley in the vicinity of Cuba, N. M., is again being considered by oil men.

An oil expert, representing a banking or a mean financial capacity, is at present at Cuba endeavoring to lease as much land as possible for the organization he represents, and states that if he succeeds in obtaining enough acreage drilling will commence in a very short time and the field will be thoroughly explored.

There is no question but that oil exists in the Cuba country, as the opinion has often been expressed in the past by several men who are experts in matter of oil development that oil is present there in large quantities, and it is firmly believed by men who are in a position to know that this region will one day be known as one of the richest oil producers of the United States.
